NORA FINNERTY'S SIN

By GEORGE MUNSON.

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

Paddy Sheehan looked at Tim Murphy with withering scorn. "You want to marry my Kathleen?" roared the ex-alderman. "Who are you? A penniless pup, a—?" "To quote your own words, Mr. Sheehan, were you not a penniless canine yourself once?" inquired Tim. "I was, son. And proud of it," answered the old man, relapsing into his native dialect. "And I made a million for myself by honest labor. When you've got started on the same way you can show your face here again— not till then. Will you get out or will I throw you out?"

That terminated the interview. But in justice to Paddy it must be said he secretly admired the young man and did not begrudge him any malice on account of his lack of means. He knew that Tim had the makings of a successful man, even though he was at present struggling along as a clerk in an insurance office. The fact was, he treasured his only child so much that he could not bear the thought of losing her.

This possibility so preyed upon his mind that he resolved to put into execution a plan he had long projected. "Kathleen, girl," he said to his daughter, "you may as well put the idea of that young pup out of your head. We're going to Ireland, which I haven't seen since I was a boy. We'll see the old home, and—Nora Finnerty. Maybe she's married now, and maybe she ain't."

Kathleen knew all about her father's boyish sweetheart, whom he had promised to marry when he sailed for America years before. He had married another woman, but the memory of his first love had always been green with him.

It is probable that, in spite of her father's injunctions, Kathleen did contrive to see Tim before sailing. Anyway, hardly had the ship passed Sandy Hook than Mr. Sheehan, strolling upon the deck, came face to face with the young man.

"What are you doing here, you scoundrel?" he shouted.

"Pardon me, Mr. Sheehan," replied the young fellow blandly, "but I think I am entitled to take passage aboard this ship."

"You're following me and Kathleen," roared the exasperated father. "No, sir. I am on my way home to Ireland to visit my mother."

"If I see you speaking to Kathleen I'll throw you into the engine room," warned Paddy, shaking his fist. Despite the most careful observation on his part, it was clear that the would-be son-in-law did not attempt to speak to Kathleen during the voyage.

He lost sight of him at Queenstown, but when he came upon him at Kerry, standing, spick and span, with a shamrock in his buttonhole, at the railroad station his anger burst out against him.

"You're following me," he shouted, shaking his fist under the young man's nose.

"Mr. Sheehan, I'll have you know once for all that I have no intention of following you," responded Tim. "I have come to Kerry to visit my old mother."

"If you cross my path again I'll eat you!" shouted the ex-alderman.

All the way to Nora Finnerty's cottage he pointed out the old landmarks. By the time the little thatched building arrived in sight he was as enthusiastic as a boy. He drew up the car leaped down and stared into the wrinkled face of the old woman knitting at the door. Then he flung his arms about her.

"Mr. Nora Finnerty, by all that's sacred!" he shouted. "Don't you know me, Nora? I'm Paddy Sheehan—Paddy that used to be your sweetheart in the long ago."

The old woman arose, beaming. "Paddy!" she cried. "Back from Chicago, where it's great things I'm hearing of you all these years. But you must come in and have a bite. Only you, mustn't kiss me, Paddy, because my husband's away and he wouldn't like it."

"You husband!" echoed Paddy. "Michael O'Rourke, who's at the fair today leaving me the sweetest boy— but come in—here's my son Tim, Mr. Sheehan."

The ex-alderman looked speechlessly at Tim Murphy. Then, whether or not the occasion overcame him, he grasped him by the hand. And instantly his daughter's arms were round his neck.

"Father, we love each other," she pleaded. "Father, you won't keep us apart?"

"If I'd have known—" began Sheehan, growling, and then he clapped the young fellow upon the back.

"Take her, Tim O'Rourke," he said. "I give up. You've won her. I didn't dream you were the son of—eh?—eh?—is it O'Rourke or is it Murphy they're after calling you?"

"Sure, he's me stepson," exclaimed the old lady. "He was my first husband's son."

"You've been married twice, then?" inquired Paddy.

"Three times," said the old lady. "And," she added wistfully, as the car drove off, half an hour later, with a happy couple upon one seat and a joyous old man on the other, "I think I'll be off to Father Flynn and ask him if it's a mortal sin to have taken three husbands when I never had one, and a fine young man like that—one that never bore any children."

The ABC and XYZ of ADVERTISING

A SERIES OF TEN TALKS ON ADVERTISING No. 6 written by Seymour Eaton of Philadelphia

I have a bunch of letters from advertisers asking me to criticize their advertisements; to tell them wherein the copy is bad or good.

It is nearly all bad; but most bad advertisements pay. The better the copy, as a general rule, the better the results. Good copy for one class of trade might be very poor copy for another. But there are a few broad general principles which are always true.

Your advertisement should be attractive enough to catch the eye. Size doesn't do this. A two inch single column card may be made to attract more notice than an announcement as big as a sheet of note paper. If your advertisement isn't seen it isn't read, and if it isn't read no matter if it has ten million circulation it isn't worth a postage stamp. You are not investing in circulation but in readers of advertisements.

The next point is to make your advertisement readable. As a rule the most readable copy is printed in fairly large book type; one kind of type with a display heading or two and the reading matter divided into easy paragraphs. Most advertisers think that by crowding the space to its utmost they are getting bigger value for their money. Within reasonable limits the very opposite is true. Ten words read are worth more than ten thousand words looked at.

If I were advertising a retail shop and I found that my advertising appropriation would allow me to take a two inch card daily in four newspapers I should multiply the two by four and take an eight inch card in one newspaper.

But the secret of copy is personality; red hot hustling life. Like breeds like. If your shop is a hustling go-ahead concern and this spirit is reflected in your advertising, the contagion will soon spread. The first hundred customers are the hardest to get; the second hundred come in about half the time; the third hundred are attracted by the crowd.

The full page announcements of the department stores overshadow the small dealer; but there is opening up a great field in every big city for the attractive advertising of the smaller shop. This advertising must be done in a new way; it must be pleasing, refined, convincing; it must appeal to the individual who loves quiet rather than noise; the very antithesis of the broadside bargain advertising so common in every newspaper.
